DECISIONS

OF THE

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS

AND OF

UNITED STATES COURTS IN PATENT CASES.

DECISIONS OF THE U. S. COURTS.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

BROWNING v. JOHNSON.

Decided April 4, 1921.

1. PATENTS—EVIDENCE HELD TO SHOW SENIOR APPLICANT DERIVED INVENTION FROM JUNIOR.

Evidence that the junior applicant conceived the invention long prior to the date claimed by the senior applicant and that he exhibited it to a patent solicitor, who showed it to the senior applicant, and other circumstances Held to show that the senior applicant derived his invention from the junior applicant and was not an original inventor.

2. SAME—NEITHER APPLICANT NOR ASSIGNEE CAN CHARGE PARTY FROM WHOM THEY DERIVED THE INVENTION WITH LACHES.

Where the evidence in interference proceedings showed that the senior applicant was not an original inventor, but that he derived the invention from the junior applicant, neither the senior applicant nor his assignee can charge the junior applicant with lack of diligence or laches or estoppel by public use.

Mr. Melville Church and Mr. George W. Case for Browning.

Mr. Richard Eyre and Mr. William H. Kenyon for Johnson.

VAN ORSDEL, J.:

The invention in interference relates to a talking-machine with the mechanical parts inclosed in a cabinet. Prior to the invention in issue, the amplifying-horn was situated on top of the reproducing mechanism and exposed to view. The present invention was designed to inclose the amplifier in the cabinet in such manner that it would give forth sufficient volume of sound. It also contemplates a plurality of doors to regulate the sound issuing from the amplifier. The issue is in a single count, as follows:

> The combination with sound reproducing means, of a coöperating amplifier, a cabinet inclosing the major portion of said amplifier and provided with an opening, of substantially the same size as the delivery end of said amplifier, and means to vary the quality of the reproduction at will on either side of said cabinet.

The party Johnson filed his application January 12, 1906, on which a patent was issued January 11, 1910. The party Browning filed his application January 18, 1908.

Browning copied the claims in issue from the Johnson patent in June, 1915, at the suggestion of the Patent Office, for the purpose of interference.

It appears that Browning, in 1897, prepared a rough drawing on the back of a dance-card, disclosing the invention in issue. This was signed by Browning and certified to by two competent witnesses. This alone, we think, established conception and disclosure. This was followed, however, by other drawings and the construction of certain rough models which clearly disclosed the invention. As Johnson's alleged conception is 1903, and the earliest date to which his proof will entitle him, is May, 1905, it must be held that Browning was the first to conceive and disclose the invention in issue.

It will be observed that we are here dealing with long periods of time. The action of neither party is indicative of great diligence. Browning conceived in 1897, reduced to practice by the construction of commercial machines at Kansas City, Mo., where he was then located, in the latter part of 1907, filed in 1908, and presented the present claim in response to the suggestion of the Patent Office in 1915. Johnson conceived in May, 1905, filed in January, 1906, put machines on the market, through his assignee, the Victor Talking Machine Company, in August, 1906, presented his claim corresponding to the present issue in December, 1909, and was awarded a patent January 11, 1910.

But these dates are of little importance, since the case turns upon the single question of originality. Was Johnson an original inventor, or did he derive the invention from Browning? Browning entered the employ of the Victor Talking Machine Company, of which Johnson was the president, in 1901. His position was that of inspector of motors, indicating to some extent, at least, skilled knowledge of the business. In the summer of 1900, Browning, in company with his wife, took what is known as "Sketch Exhibit No. 7," which is a complete disclosure of the invention, to Mr. Horace Pettit, of Philadelphia, to ascertain the cost of procuring a patent. Pettit was at that time attorney for Johnson, and, after the organization of the Victor Talking Machine Company in 1901, he became its attorney, and continued such until the date of his death in 1914. The price named by Pettit for procuring a patent seemed high to the Brownings, and they expressed a desire to take time to consider it. Pettit suggested that the sketches be left with him and he would submit them to a client of his, a Mr. Johnson, of Camden, who was engaged in the business of manufacturing talking-machines. Browning then attempted to induce a friend by the name of Stafford to take an interest in the invention and furnish the money necessary to secure a patent. To this end, Browning and Stafford visited Pettit's office to consult him with reference to the procuring of a patent. Pettit informed them that he had laid the matter before Johnson, but had failed to interest him in the invention; that a patent could be procured, but that they would not be able to market the machines, because of certain other existing patents. Following this interview, Stafford, who had taken further time to consider the matter, wrote Browning the following letter:

2073 E. ELKHART ST.,
PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.,
Oct. 20, 1900.

FRIEND JOHN:

Your letter received. I think the price Mr. H. Pettit asks for securing us the patent on the two drawings, he returned to you is too much. I don't understand his remarks about getting a patent, and not being allowed to sell the talking machine on account of some other patent.

This probably explains why he was unable to interest his client E. Johnson that he mentioned.

I will be over to see the machine next week and discuss the matter more fully.

Sincerely yours,

ROB.

These facts are positively testified to by Browning and his two corroborating witnesses. They are also strongly supported by corroborating circumstances. Browning also testifies to three disclosures, at least, of the invention to Johnson and to other officers of the Victor Talking Machine Company between 1901 and 1905. Johnson, on the excuse of sickness, failed to testify. Pettit was dead when the testimony was taken, and while others named by Browning in connection with the disclosures testified, no positive denial was interposed by any one of them in reference to the disclosure of the invention to Johnson and his associates. Unless we are to discredit by the wholesale competent witnesses who stand unimpeached, this record overwhelmingly discloses that Johnson derived the invention from Browning. Hence, neither he nor his associates are entitled to benefit from the monopoly conferred by the patent.

This disposes of the case, since neither Johnson nor his assignee is in position to charge Browning with lack of diligence, laches, or estoppel by public use, as has been attempted.

The decision is reversed.

Reversed.

The decision of the Assistant Commissioner of Patents reads as follows:

COULSTON, Assistant Commissioner:

This is an appeal from a decision of the Examiners-in-Chief reversing a decision of the Examiner of Interferences and awarding priority of invention to the senior party, Johnson.

The issue is comprised in the following comparatively specific count:

"The combination with sound reproducing means, of a coöperating amplifier, a cabinet inclosing the major portion of said amplifier and provided with an opening, of substantially the same size as the delivery end of said amplifier, and means to vary the quality of the reproduction at will on either side of said cabinet."

One of the parties, Johnson, prior to 1901 ran a general machine-shop in Camden, N. J., at which, among other things, talking-machine parts were sometimes made. In that year he assisted in organizing and became president of the Victor Talking Machine Co., which office he still holds. The other party, Browning, was an employee of the Victor Company, with brief exceptions, from practically its inception until the summer of 1907, when he moved to Kansas City.

Johnson is involved in the interference on a patent granted January 11, 1910, on an application filed January 12, 1906. Browning is involved on an application filed January 18, 1908.

The principal question to be decided is one of originality of invention. The burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence rests upon Browning by reason of his later filing date.

In reaching my conclusions I have had occasion not only to read the records but to prepare a rather extensive analysis, which, for the most part, I have decided to incorporate in my decision, at the risk of rendering it less easily read, but in the hope of conveying a better idea of the character of the proofs than a briefer statement would give.

The proofs submitted on behalf of Johnson set forth an alleged disclosure by him to his brother-in-law, MacEwan, in January, 1908, while they were inspecting a cellaret at Van Sciver's dining-place in Camden, N. J. It appears from MacEwan's account that what Johnson then disclosed was " * * * an idea of having a talking machine constructed with the doors in front of the opening of the horn so by operating the doors by opening and closing, he could regulate and modify the sound."

This disclosure did not embrace all features of the count. For example, it did not specify that the cabinet was to inclose the "major portion of the amplifier" or that it was to be "provided with an opening of substantially the same size as the delivery end of said amplifier."

According to the testimony Johnson somewhat later had MacEwan take another employee of the company, English, who was in charge of an experimental laboratory, down to Van Sciver's to see the cellaret and have Johnson's idea explained to him. This was done, and English made a drawing of a cabinet (Johnson's Exhibit No. 1), which does not disclose the issue, for one reason because it shows no means or doors to vary the sound on either side of the cabinet. From this drawing English had one Medara, a carpenter, make the small Medara cabinet (Johnson's Exhibit No. 2). This device has now no doors; but there is sufficient testimony to establish that it did when made in September or October, 1903. However, this device, even equipped with its doors and when fitted up with a top, like Johnson's Exhibit No. 3, a reproducer, a motor, the sound-conveyer tube, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 6,) and the amplifier, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 4,) did not and does not answer the count because the opening in the cabinet is not "substantially the same size as the delivery end of the amplifier," but much larger.

The next cabinet produced—the large Medara cabinet, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 3)—and its successor—the Townsend cabinet, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 14)—admittedly do not answer the count because they have but one door.

The next cabinets produced by Johnson are known as the "Stevens" cabinets, (Johnson's Exhibits 18 and 19.) These were built in March, 1905. They were thereafter fitted up under the direction of English and Johnson. Both of these cabinets had single doors when delivered. Johnson had the door of Exhibit No. 19 altered and a "sugar-bin-like" structure (Johnson's Exhibit No. 27) inserted in front of the horn. It is not contended that this cabinet in any form ever embodied the issue. Later the Stevens cabinet (Johnson's Exhibit No. 18) had its original single door removed and small double doors mounted on the lower part thereof, as it now stands. This occurred in May, 1905, and both tribunals below have held that this exhibit so formed and supplied with the horn, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 26,) a reproducer, and motor embodied the issue and shows that Johnson was in possession of the invention at that date. With this conclusion I can not agree, because manifestly the opening in this cabinet is not "substantially the same size as the delivery end of the amplifier," but very much larger. It does not appear from the proofs what, if any, form of closure Johnson contemplated for the opening above the double doors in his Exhibit No. 18.

The next cabinet made for Johnson was the Sheip cabinet, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 36.) MacEwan testifies that he completed the drawing (Johnson's Exhibit No. 33) showing the exterior configuration and door arrangement of this device prior to June 17, 1905, just a day or so before English returned from Europe on that date. This drawing does not disclose the complete subject-matter of the issue; but the Sheip cabinet was built and delivered to the laboratory of the Victor Company, at 118 Cooper street, some time during the last two weeks of August, 1905, and was fully fitted up when MacEwan returned from his vacation, September 1, 1905. (Qs. 382, 383, 387, pp. 88, 89, Johnson's record.) This cabinet was equipped with a horn made by Diehl, Johnson's Exhibit No. 37, (Q. 390, p. 89; Q. 393, p. 90;) with a tone-arm bracket like that on Johnson's Exhibit No. 19, Stevens's cabinet B, (Q. 399, p. 91,) Johnson's Exhibit No. 51 being the identical bracket, (Q. 301, p. 299;) with a tone-arm of the same type as that shown in United States Patent No. 834,511, Johnson's Exhibit No. 16, (Q. 400, p. 91,) Johnson's Exhibit No. 50 being one, (Q. 303, p. 299,) and with a motor like Johnson's Exhibit No. 52, (Q. 298, p. 298.) This device so constructed embodied the issue and was, according to MacEwan, tested by MacEwan, Diehl, and English September 1, 1905, (Q. 397, p. 90.) Diehl fully corroborates MacEwan as to the construction and testing of the Johnson Exhibit No. 36 Sheip cabinet in the fall of 1905 and states that Johnson also was present at the tests, at which a number of different horns, including Johnson's Exhibits Nos. 31 and 59, were tried out in this cabinet, the small doors in front thereof being opened and closed to regulate the sound.

Troth, who was purchasing agent or assistant purchasing agent for the Victor Company in 1905, testifies that he and English gave instructions to one Gilbert, of the Sheip Manufacturing Company, for the construction of the Sheip cabinet, (Johnson's Exhibit No. 36,) which was built in August, 1905.

I am satisfied from the foregoing proof that Johnson not only had knowledge of the invention but reduced it to practice as early as September, 1905.

It seems that English was not quite satisfied with the design of the Sheip cabinet from the standpoint of appearance, and steps were taken for producing a more acceptable form. Two cabinets were ordered from Stout Brothers in October, 1905, and delivered in November, 1905. These are Johnson's Exhibits Nos. 40 and 41. Thereafter, late in 1905, two other cabinets designed by a Mr. Pitts, of the Lincoln Furniture Company, were ordered from that company. One of these (Johnson's Exhibit No. 54) is in evidence and has been identified by both MacEwan and Troth, who ordered it. Its companion was sent to the Gramaphone Company, of London, England.

On February 16, 1906, a meeting was held by the officials of the Victor Company, at which it was decided that slight changes, wholly immaterial to this issue, should be made in the Lincoln cabinet. These changes included staining the inside of the cabinet the same shade as its outside, painting the horn black, removing carved work from record-doors, and building the cover so as to slightly project in front to facilitate opening. Johnson's Exhibit No. 55 is one of these modified forms, which became the factory product. It was made on or about October 4, 1906. (Johnson's rec., p. 734, stipulation 4.)

There is a stipulation on pages 734 and 735 of Johnson's record to the effect that from August 22, 1906, continuously up to the present time the Victor Talking Machine Company has manufactured and sold cabineted talking-machines embodying in their construction the issue of this interference, under the registered trade-mark "Victrola;" that during the said period the said company has manufactured and sold many thousands of such talking-machines embodying the construction of the issue and is now extensively so engaged. Browning testifies (Q. 136, p. 70, Browning's rec.) that on November 3, 1906, the first "Victrola" sample passed through the shipping department of the Victor Company and was sent to the trade. He states that he then held a position in that department requiring his inspection and report on each machine so passsed and that others came through on November 22, 1906.

Browning claims not only to have conceived and reduced the invention to practice prior to Johnson's earliest date, but to have disclosed it to Johnson and his associates on several different occasions. Browning did not, however, file his own application until January 18, 1908, and did not copy the claim in issue from Johnson's patent, which issued on January 11, 1910, and was cited against claims in Browning's application on May 12, 1911, until June 18, 1915, after it was suggested by the Patent Office for interference. These delays, following actual knowledge of the marketing of the device in issue by the Victor Company and extending over a long period, during which that Company at great expense built up an enormous business largely based on the subject-matter covered by the Johnson patent, makes it incumbent upon Browning to establish a very clear case if he is to prevail.

The Examiner of Interferences held that Browning's proofs as to priority meet the requirements that confront him; that Johnson is shown to have derived the invention from him, a conclusion based largely upon the failure of Johnson to take the stand, but that Browning should be held estopped from obtaining a patent by reason of his laches.

The Examiners-in-Chief reversed this decision, holding that Browning has advanced a fictitious case and that Johnson is the original and only true inventor.

Browning's proofs, in addition to oral testimony, comprise a relatively large number of crudely-constructed models and sketches. The models are accompanied, almost without exception, by sketches and descriptive matter explanatory of the structures shown, and these sketches are regularly witnessed and dated. Disregarding the surrounding circumstances, which the Examiners-in-Chief found sufficient to discredit Browning's whole case, his proofs would be regarded as unusually full and convincing. Indeed, the very perfection and skill with which Browning's case has been constructed and presented is calculated to put the reader upon the closest inquiry, because it is rare, indeed, that an inventor builds up and preserves such a history of his achievements as Browning has produced. He has been through several interferences, and it has been suggested that he has had an opportunity to learn of the kind of evidence that is usually accepted.

Browning's principal supporting witnesses comprise a very restricted circle of close relatives and friends. They are his wife, Susan Browning, who, in addition to being interested as a wife, is admittedly financially interested in the case in the sense that she has loaned Browning money in furthering his activities in connection therewith; Mrs. Lillian Bennett, intimate associate of Mrs. Browning for many years; Robert Stafford, close friend of Browning and sufficiently acquainted with Mrs. Browning and Mrs. Bennett to address them as "Sue" and "Lil," and Matthew G. Coombs, Browning's brother-in-law, a brother of Mrs. Browning.

The testimony of his subordinate witnesses lends but little support to Browning's main case, discussion of the leading features of which follows:

Browning testifies that he conceived the invention in the early part of 1897, and fixes the date by a dated sketch and description that he says he made on a program on Monday evening, May 3, 1897. The program mentioned is introduced in evidence as Browning's Exhibit No. 1. It has not been disputed that it discloses the issue, although there is no certain disclosure here of that feature of the count which requires that the opening in the cabinet shall be "of substantially the same size as the delivery end of the amplifier."

In an up-and-down direction the sounding-boards 6 of the amplifier may be said to form an amplifier with a delivery end of substantially the size of the cabinet-opening, but in a horizontal direction there is no disclosure at all as to this feature, and it is not mentioned in the descriptive matter on the sketch. Consideration of Browning's Exhibit No. 16, later to be mentioned, reveals an example of cabinet which does not embody the issue for this very reason.

Browning testifies that Browning's Exhibit No. 1, including both sketch and description, was made in a restaurant, after a dance, in the presence of Sue Coombs, the future Mrs. Browning, and her friend, Mrs. Bennett, for the purpose of an explanation and was explained to them. They corroborate him very positively as to this. The sketch carries the signature of Sue Coombs and Lillian Bennett, and the name of J. B. Browning is signed to both sketch and description.

Some noteworthy features of this important exhibit will now be mentioned, and, first, the fact that the construction portrayed is seemingly much more perfect and much nearer to the Victrola arrangement of parts than a number of Browning's admittedly later devices—for example, his exhibit devices 15, 26, and 27. The latter is a device like that shown in Browning's application; but instead of being a unitary cabinet designed to contain both a motor and amplifier it is a sort of cover-cabinet for a common type of talking-machine of its day, designed to rest thereon, and it carries only an amplifier.

Another significant fact is that it does not appear that Browning ever thought of the invention shown in his Exhibit No. 1 prior to the time he entered the restaurant or what familiarity he then had with talking-machines, and it is surprising, to say the least, that he should have been able to produce off hand a form of structure apparently so similar to that developed only after two or three years' experimentation by the Victor Company and even after Browning claims to have disclosed his invention to Johnson and that it should at the very first appear in a form over which Browning himself never later on succeeded in making improvements.

The description of the structure shown in the sketch is not worded as one would expect to find it if written, as is claimed, merely to explain the structure to Browning's female companions. In the first place, to have taken the time and trouble to have written a description at all, while acting as host to these young women at a dinner after a dance, is rather extraordinary, especially as it would have been much easier to have contented one's self with an oral explanation. The writing of a description of an invention in technical terms is not the enlivening form of entertainment usually adduced on such occasions. The description begins with a date, which could hardly have been written for the information of Browning's guests. The first statement reads: "Description of talking machine shown on opposite cover." This much, at least, would naturally have been left to inference or oral statement unless the writer was looking forward to a possible future use for this exhibit. The description also contains certain expressions—e. g., "cabinet containing," "a hollow rigid casting supporting a sound box and its connection in coöperation," "sounding boards," "rigid hollow bracket," and "pivoted movable sounding boards or horizontal modifiers"—which, while they may have naturally flowed from Browning's mind as he wrote, lead one to wonder that so many new objects could have been so spontaneously concerned, so skilfully sketched, and so aptly named while the author was playing in the role of host to two young ladies at a dinner after a dance.

Counsel for Johnson has called attention to the similarity in construction of this sketch of the "sounding boards" 66, rigidly supported at one end by a "rigid hollow bracket" and free at the other, to a similar structure covered by a patent—No. 947,227—to English, the mechanical expert of the Victor Company. This patent was applied for in 1906 through Horace Pettit, as attorney, and in its specification the expressions "sound boards," "hollow bracket," "rigid hollow structure," "rigid bracket," "rigid hollow bracket," "hollow rigid bracket rigidly supported," and similar expressions are frequently used. These expressions are strikingly similar to the expressions used in the description of Browning's Exhibit No. 1. Browning does not claim to have disclosed his Exhibit No. 1 to Pettit or English, and it is interesting, if Browning used these expressions in 1897, to speculate as to how Pettit came to use them in July, 1906, when the English application was filed.

As counsel for Johnson has also pointed out, there is at least a strong suggestion in this Browning sketch of the tapering tone-arm with an axis substantially parallel to the axis of the amplifier and to the gooseneck-mounting for the sound-box of Johnson's patents, Nos. 814,786 and 814,848.

Another interesting feature of Browning's Exhibit No. 1 is the arrangement of the crank for winding the motor to project out of the top of the cabinet-casing. This is precisely the form of home-made crank constructed of small-diameter piping used to wind the motor employed as a part of Browning's Exhibit No. 3, which exhibit is said to have been built with two movable walls instead of doors prior to August 28, 1898, and is the same style of crank shown in Exhibit No. 2, a sketch of that device in that form and bearing that date. It appears from Mrs. Browning's testimony (X-Qs. 119–125, pp. 329—330) that Browning did not have this motor at the time his Exhibit No. 1 is said to have been prepared in May, 1897, but that she bought it for him second hand in the latter part of 1897 or the early part of 1898. The similarity of the structure of the crank shown by the sketch Exhibit No. 1 and the crank of the motor afterward bought is unexplained.

Still another interesting feature of the Browning Exhibit No. 1 is the use of double sound-modifying means, the horizontally-pivoted modifiers 7 7 7, and the vertically-pivoted modifiers or doors 9 9 for the opening in front of the amplifier. Just why this double arrangement of sound modification should have been proposed at the time is unexplained.

Mrs. Bennett testifies that the earliest time Browning spoke to her of his intentions in talking-machines was the night of the dance, the date of which she does not remember; but she volunteers: "The program tells that." (Qs. 10, 11, p. 226, Browning's rec.) She identifies the sketch Browning's Exhibit No. 1 and recalls the following conversation:

"While he was drawing it he said, 'I'm going to invent a machine to play without a horn.' We just smiled and then he finished drawing that and said, 'I want you both to sign this.' So we did."

She identifies her signature and that of Sue Coombs, says they were affixed that same evening, that the writing was on the front cover, and that she read it that evening. In answer to X-Q. 103 she testifies that Browning also read the description aloud after making and explaining the sketch, but neither she nor Miss Coombs paid much attention to it.

Mrs. Browning gives similar testimony and in answer to Q. 13, (p. 313, Browning's rec.,) as to whether she read the writing on Exhibit No. 1 or whether it was read over to her, states that she read the description, and it was while they "were waiting for lunch to be served." Thus it appears, if all this testimony is true, that Browning made the sketch and explained it orally, then wrote out a description of it and read it over to his companions, and then each of them read it for herself. This seems hardly likely, and especially as Mrs. Bennett says: "We were neither one particularly interested, so didn't pay much attention to it."

There is an interesting conflict in the testimony of Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Browning also as to the time Browning was engaged in the making of his Exhibit No. 1. Mrs. Bennett testifies (X-Q. 91, p. 236) that they were at lunch about an hour and in X-Q. 97, (p. 237) that Browning was doing something at his Exhibit No. 1 "from the time we went in there until the time we left." Mrs. Browning testifies that they were at lunch about an hour and a half, of which a half-hour was spent eating (X-Q. 232, p. 346) and fifteen or twenty minutes waiting for a check after lunch, and that she read the description while they "were waiting for lunch to be served," which suggests that the exhibit was entirely made before eating began. If so, Browning's achievement is the more remarkable because executed in so short a time.

Mrs. Bennett is not very sure she understood what Browning disclosed. She says she did in a way. (X-Q. 96, p. 237.) Neither she nor Mrs. Browning had then seen the inside of a talking-machine so far as they know. Mrs. Bennett recalls dating the sketch; but her memory is not very reliable on other matters. She cannot recall what she ate, or who was the proprietor of the restaurant, or how many people were in the café, or what she wore or what Miss Coombs wore. Mrs. Browning, on the other hand, remembers almost too well, for she recalls, despite the lapse of twenty years, that there were very many people present and not only that she had chicken salad and fried oysters but, what is somewhat more surprising, she states that Mrs. Bennett had the same service as herself and Browning had "snapper soup," and that there was "coffee for three." Although Mrs. Browning remembers these remote occurrences so well, she does not know, or at least is not sure, on the 28th of May, 1918, whether her husband, although she seems to have been with him, reviewed the testimony in the evenings which he began to give on the 8th of the same month.

Taken altogether, Browning's proofs with reference to his Exhibit No. 1 are not convincing. I have dwelt upon them at much length because they stand at the very threshold of his story and serve in a way as a criterion by which to measure the further testimony he offers.

Browning testifies that his second step was the construction and demonstration of his device (Exhibit No. 3) with adjustable walls on either side to modify sound. This occurred, he states, prior to August 28, 1898, when he made a sketch (Browning's Exhibit No. 2) thereof. This sketch was dated, witnessed by S. M. Coombs, his future wife, and is identified by Mrs. Browning. This device and sketch do not embody the issue, since the amplifier and sound-modifying means are merged. Mrs. Browning fully corroborates Browning's testimony as to both.

Browning testifies that doors were placed on his Exhibit No. 3 prior to March 16, 1899, that it was then demonstrated and a sketch made thereof, (Browning's Exhibit No. 4.) This sketch is also dated, witnessed, and identified by S. M. Coombs, now Mrs. Browning. This sketch, however, shows side doors 19 and 20 equal to the full depth of the figure. The side doors of Exhibit No. 3 are only half as deep and the front doors are pivoted to rigid side walls thereof.

Stafford testifies that Browning played on Browning's Exhibit No. 3 for him in Browning's cellar in the latter part of the year 1900 and on several occasions; but he does not state how he fixes the date.

Matthew G. Coombs identifies Exhibit No. 3 as a construction Browning had completed as early as April, 1902, when the witness went to live at the Browning home, and where it was played for him. Neither he nor Stafford undertake to so testify to the details of the construction of this exhibit as to lead one to the conviction that they are sure of their understanding of it or its identification. No witness testifies that the device operated successfully.

Browning testifies that his next step was to arrange a small brass horn in Exhibit No. 3, with two horizontal movable sounding-boards, and to make a sketch and write a description of the same, which he signed and dated November 29, 1899, and which he had Sue M. Coombs sign and date. This sketch is offered in evidence as Browning's Exhibit No. 5. Mrs. Browning testifies that she and Browning signed it on November 29, 1899; but I find no further corroboration. The different figures of this sketch are not consistent as to door-mountings, nor do any of them correspond very closely to Exhibit No. 3 in this respect. The description of this sketch also uses the expression "hollow bracket" and "sounding boards."

Browning testifies that he next—in the summer of 1900—made the device introduced in evidence as "Browning's Exhibit No. 6 megaphone-cabinet" and arranged it in the lower compartment of his Exhibit No. 3, made a sketch of it, which is in evidence as his Exhibit No. 7, and, accompanied by his wife, (he was married April 18, 1900,) took this sketch and another to Horace Pettit to find out how much it would cost to get a patent; that he remembers that "the price was out of proportion for what he had heard others secure patents," and he further states:

"* * * I remember that Mr. Pettit suggested that if I left the sketches with him he would take it up with a client whom he mentioned, Mr. Johnson, who made talking machines in Camden, as he might be interested; he might be enabled to get him to promote this invention. This sketch I left and a short time afterward I met a party whom I knew, and whom I had tried before to interest, and I told him that I had made some improvements in my invention, describing it, and asked him if he thought he was still interested, and I took him with me to see my attorney Pettit and have him explain about what it would cost, as this is what we were interested in. Then Mr. Pettit told me that he had taken this matter up with his client, Mr. Johnson, the talking machine man of Camden, and said he was not interested. He, however, said he could get us a patent but said that we would not be able to manufacture and market this machine in view of some prior patent. The party, Mr. Stafford, said he would consider the matter. And then Mr. Pettit returned the drawings to me at this time. A short time afterward I wrote to Mr. Stafford asking if he had given the matter any further consideration, and if he would come over and see my improvements, and he wrote me a letter as follows:

"2073 E. ELKHART ST.,
"PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.,
"Oct. 20th, 1900.

"FRIEND JOHN:

"Your letter received. I think the price Mr. H. Pettit asks for securing us the patents on the two drawings, he returned to you is too much. I don't quite understand his remarks about getting a patent, and not be allowed to sell the talking machine on acc't. of some other patent.

"This probably explains why he was unable to interest his client E. Johnson that he mentioned.

"I will be over to see the machine next week and discuss the matters more fully.

"Sincerely yours,
ROB."

Mrs. Browning identifies the signatures of Browning, Munday, and Stafford on Browning's Exhibit No. 7. She says she was present when both were affixed and Munday signed a day or so earlier than Stafford. She states that she was with Browning when he took this sketch to Pettit; that it was left there two weeks to be shown, she believes, to his client, "a Mr. Johnson, of Camden, the talking machine man." When cross-examined about the second sketch that is said to have been taken to Pettit she falls at once upon uncertain ground. She repeatedly assures the examiner that if she should be shown the sketch she would give him the information he asks; but, relying on her memory, she states she is "under the impression" that Stafford did not sign it. She does not recall whether it was dated or to what part of a talking-machine it referred. I have not been impressed with the accuracy of her memory when led away from the expected path of her story. Her testimony is extremely meager in the matter of describing structures in her own language.

Stafford corroborates Browning's testimony quite fully as to the sketch. (Browning's Exhibit No. 7.) He says he was at Pettit's office with Browning; that he first "had" the sketch there. (Q. 8, p. 249.) When asked to explain how he came to be invited to go to Pettit's office he says: "If I remember correctly, John wished to know if I could raise some money for him, or advance the money, to put the machine on the market;" and he guesses Browning asked him to go to find out directly how much it would cost to file an application. He shows a disposition to spar with counsel on cross-examination, but finally states that he has seen Browning's Exhibit No. 7 half a dozen times or more since October 25, 1900.

It does not appear from Stafford's deposition that he understood Browning's Exhibit No. 7 or that he read over or had read to him the description it bears of the structure it shows, either before or after he signed it. The last line of the description contains the only reference to the doors, and it finishes in a curious rise over the word "Inventor," suggesting that it may have been added after that word was written. It would have been possible to add the doors to the sketch and this final line of descriptive matter, and I do not find the testimony of either Mrs. Browning or Stafford sufficiently detailed and explicit to make me believe that they would have detected the difference after a lapse of eighteen years.

Browning's Exhibit No. 7, although supposed to represent Exhibit No. 3 with the megaphone Exhibit No. 6 in it, differs therefrom in the way the side walls are mounted, in adding the sound-deflectors 12 in the megaphone not found in Exhibit No. 6, and in showing a gooseneck connection to the sound-box and not the form of connection found in Exhibit No. 3. Stafford testifies to having scratched his name on Browning's Exhibit No. 6 on October 25, 1900, the day he signed the sketch, (Browning's Exhibit No. 7,) but does not remember where he was when he did it. He says he saw Exhibit No. 6 used in Exhibit No. 3. Munday, who witnessed this sketch, was too ill to be called and died before the testimony was completed. Pettit died long before the beginning of taking of testimony. Johnson was not called to answer the charge of indirect disclosure to him through Pettit or any of the charges of direct disclosure made by Browning because of severe illness established by the testimony of his physician, Faries. Under the circumstances I cannot conclude that Browning has succeeded in proving disclosure to Johnson through Pettit; nor do I believe it was incumbent upon Johnson to produce the records of Pettit's office. That was Browning's privilege if they were desired and useful.

Browning testifies of his next work, after making Browning's Exhibit No. 6 and the visit to Pettit's office, as follows:

"I then started to make a machine having all of the efficiency of my other machine but of reduced size. In this machine I tried to increase the efficiency as well as decrease the size, making a more economical structure. This machine I completed and demonstrated on March 15, 1901. I made a sketch of this machine showing it in twelve elevations, and various modifications. This machine I demonstrated to my wife and had her sign the sketch, which she did, and dated it 3/15/01. This sketch shows a cabinet provided with sound amplifying means or doors on either side of the cabinet to modify the sound at will. This sketch I now produce. (Q. 37.)"

The device here mentioned is introduced in evidence as Browning's Exhibit No. 10 and the sketch thereof as Browning's Exhibit No. 9.

Mrs. Browning testifies that Browning had his Exhibit No. 10 in 1901, and she states that his signature and hers, which appear on the sketch, (Browning's Exhibit No. 9,) were placed thereon on March 15, 1901.

Matthew G. Coombs, the brother-in-law, testifies from memory that Browning had Browning's Exhibit No. 10 in 1902 and it was then in a condition to play.

The amplifier of that device includes a part of the cabinet-walls.

Browning testifies as follows of his next alleged production:

"After I completed this machine in March, 1901, as shown in Exhibit No. 10, I commenced to make another arrangement of sounding board which consisted of a plurality of sounding boards spaced apart forming a plurality of stratas, or diverging sound passages. On both sides of these diverging partitions. I completed this device and when completed, comprised four rectangular flat sounding boards and eight diverging walls forming nine chambers. This I completed and arranged in the Exhibit No. 10, which I now do by removing the loose sounding boards from the exhibit and placing this device in this machine. After I did this I made sketch of this device as now assembled in Exhibit No. 10, and operated it. I did this as indicated by the writing and signatures on the back of this sketch which I now produce, which writing as follows:

"'The machine as illustrated in Figure 4 completed and demonstrated December 7th, 1901. J. B. Browning, in the presence of S. M. Browning.'"

Browning's Exhibits Nos. 11 and 12 are introduced in evidence as the sketch and device to which his last-quoted answer refers. Browning further testifies that he operated the device, (Exhibit No. 12,) arranged as shown in Fig. 4 of the sketch, (Exhibit No. 11,) for Stafford and that the latter signed his name and the date "12/20/1901" on the top sounding-board of Exhibit No. 12, where it is now found.

Stafford testifies that he wrote his name and the date "12/22/1901" on Browning's Exhibit No. 12 and that that device was demonstrated to him in Exhibit No. 10 before Christmas of 1901.

Mrs. Browning testifies that she saw Stafford write his name on Exhibit No. 12; that that exhibit was made before December, 1901, and before the sketch, (Exhibit No. 11,) on which she identifies her name and that of Browning as written by them.

An interesting comparison may be made of Browning's Exhibit No. 12 with the amplifier structure disclosed by a patent to English, No. 1,067,905, on which application was filed June 29, 1907, and which was granted July 22, 1913.

Very similar testimony to that given with reference to Browning's Exhibits Nos. 11 and 12 is also given with reference to the making of Browning's Exhibit No. 14 megaphone-cabinet and his Exhibit No. 13, which is a sketch thereof signed and dated by Browning and Mrs. Browning, these dates being in June, 1902. Browning testifies that he made these Browning Exhibits Nos. 13 and 14 while working for the Victor Talking Machine Company and that prior to this time (1902) he had been driving a wagon for the Adams Express Company.

Browning testifies that he next built and tested the device in evidence, marked "Browning's Exhibit No. 15." As to this he is corroborated by Mrs. Browning and his brother-in-law, Coombs. This device contains only one door in front of the amplifier and is admittedly not within the issue.

Browning testifies that from 1901 to 1903 he was also working on his double-gooseneck invention, for which he says he borrowed money in the fall of 1903 to file an application. This device was assigned to the Victor Talking Machine Company and became Patent No. 1,022,180 April 2, 1912.

Browning testifies that he next built and operated his Exhibit No. 16 as early as May 8, 1904. A sketch of this device, (Browning's Exhibit No. 17,) signed by him and signed and dated by Mrs. Browning, is also in evidence. Neither Stafford nor Mrs. Bennett testifies to having seen this machine prior to 1906, when it is said to have been sold to Mrs. Bennett. Although Browning testifies positively that he made this device prior to the date (May 8, 1904,) of the sketch, (Browning's Exhibit No. 17,) Mrs. Browning testifies (X-Qs. 226 and 227, p. 345) that Browning was working on it in 1905 and that it seems to her that he began to cut it in the latter part of 1905. She gives this testimony notwithstanding that on her direct examination she identified Browning's Exhibit No. 17 as made by her husband May 8, 1904, and stated that she signed it. (Q. 88, p. 324.)

It was in September, 1905, that Johnson reduced the invention to practice with the Sheip cabinet, and it is at least possible that Browning, then an employee of the Victor Company, had gotten wind of what was going on, and that Mrs. Browning may be right in stating that Browning began the construction of his Exhibit No. 16 machine "in the latter part of 1905." A large amount of testimony has been adduced to establish the sale of this Browning Exhibit No. 16 device to Mrs. Bennett on January 27, 1906, and a receipt for that sale is produced and identified by Browning and Mrs. Bennett. Assuming that the machine was then sold, the sale occurred after Johnson had completed the invention. Moreover, it is quite immaterial, for the reason that Browning's Exhibit No. 16, although disclosing the remaining elements, does not conform to the issue in the particular that the cabinet (inclosing the major portion of the amplifier) shall be provided with an opening of substantially the same size as the delivery end of the amplifier. On behalf of Browning it is urged that "in Browning's Exhibits 16 and 17 the walls of the lower chamber 9, in which the horn 15 is located, themselves, in connection with the horn constitute an amplifier whose delivery end has applied to it the means to vary the quality (?) of the reproduction at will on either side of the cabinet."

This I can only regard as an unsuccessful attempt to make the exhibits seem to fit the language of the count.

Browning testifies (Q. 123, p. 56) that prior to October 6, 1905, he had an interview with Mr. Middleton, secretary of the Victor Talking Machine Company, and a Mr. Kennedy, now deceased, but then one of its patent attorneys, and agreed to submit to them for consideration a number of sketches or drawings of different inventions, as recounted in the testimony of interference No. 33,738, in which the drawings in question, or most of them, were introduced as Exhibit No. 5, Browning's drawings submitted to the Victor Talking Machine Company October 6, 1905, to November 27, 1905. Of the drawings of that exhibit sheets 13 and 24 and a blue-print of a sheet numbered 22 are produced and identified by Browning and introduced in evidence in this case as Exhibit No. 20. Attached to sheet 13 Browning testifies of a sheet of memoranda (now missing) partly in the handwriting of Kennedy and partly in the handwriting of Mr. Bennett, who, Browning states, had charge of the patent department of the Victor Talking Machine Company at that time. These drawings, Browning testifies, were shown to both Johnson and Kennedy and that both of them were on the stand in interference No. 33,738 and neither one denied that they had seen these sheets of drawings. I have examined the testimony taken in interference No. 33,738 and fail to find that any drawings were shown to Kennedy or that he was asked about any and that the only testimony then given by Johnson with reference to drawings shown him on the stand was in answer to the following question.

"X-Q. 19. Can you say whether or not the sketches which I now show you were among the sketches which Mr. Browning submitted?

A. I never saw them before, as I recall.

Mr. Hunter. I will ask the notary to mark this paper for identification 'Browning Sketch No. 1.'"

The blue-print, which is sheet 3 of Browning's Exhibit No. 20, bears the inscription "Browning sketch" and is entitled in interference No. 33,738.

Bennett, of the Victor Talking Machine Company, Browning says, returned these drawings of Browning's Exhibit No. 20 to him prior to November 27, 1905, as appears from a statement in the handwriting of Matthew Coombs, Jr., on the back of each sheet. A letter, dated November 22, 1905, from Middleton to Browning, and another, slightly earlier, are produced in evidence as Browning's Exhibit No. 21, Victor Letters. The letter of November 22, 1905, told Browning that the "inventions" he had submitted had been taken up with the board of directors, who have gone over them carefully, and they are unable to see anything among the set which would be of any value to them whatever; that they had had the prior art looked up and found in a great many cases the inventions were antedated and rendered of no value.

Browning produces and identifies a red tape and card addressed to him as used upon the package of drawings when handed him by Bennett. Browning's testimony as to the return of these drawings is corroborated by Coombs, who identifies his handwriting on the sheets of Exhibit No. 20, and says he saw these sheets before they were sent to the Victor Talking Machine Company, as well as after their return, when he undid the package and dated them.

Bennett, who is no longer an employee of the Victor Talking Machine Company, testifying for Johnson, (Q. 14, p. 614, Johnson's rec.,) says that to the best of his knowledge and belief he never saw the three sheets of Browning's Exhibit No. 20 until the day before his testimony was being given. He says that he recalls that the drawings that be returned to Browning in connection with the letter of November 22, 1905, (Browning's Exhibit No. 22, "consisted of a number of small scraps of paper and pieces of yellow paper torn off and with irregular lines, some of which were quite unintelligible, so much so, in fact, that in a great number of instances, they represented 'chicken scratches.'"

He testifies that he does not recall any talk or conference with Browning over these drawings, and he states positively that Browning did not point out or state in connection with the drawings referred to in the letter of November 22, 1905, that he was the inventor of "* * * a talking machine, the sound reproducing mechanism, amplifying mechanism, and conveyor between the reproducing mechanism and amplifier, substantially and entirely inclosed within a cabinet or casing, and that the casing was provided with an opening adjacent the mouth of the amplifier, said opening being provided with a pair of doors to modify and deflect the sound issuing from the amplifier," and that if he had it would have made an impression on him because the Victor Company was working on a cabinet of the type described.

Bennett testifies that Browning never after November 22, 1905, suggested, advised, or told him that he (Browning) was the inventor of the Victrola. When shown the slip alleged to contain his handwriting and said to have been pinned to sheet 13 of Browning's Exhibit No. 20 when returned to Browning, Bennett states that it recalls nothing to his memory concerning any examination by him of this sheet. He does not recall returning the drawings to Browning, but states that the writing on the tag appears to be his, as also that on the slip alleged to have been pinned to sheet 13 of Browning's Exhibit No. 20, and he identifies Kennedy's writing on another part of this slip. He states that he does not connect the slip with sheet 13 of Exhibit No. 20 and does not know how they came to be attached. He states that he does recall taking Browning and some sketches of his to Mr. Kennedy in 1905 and that at other times Browning submitted sketches during his connection with the patent department.

Middleton, who is a director of the Victor Talking Machine Company and who was secretary to it from its inception in 1901 to 1912 or 1913, gives very similar testimony to that of Bennett. He identifies the letter dated November 22, 1905, forming part of Browning's Exhibit No. 21, as one dictated and signed by him, but states that he has no recollection of what the drawings therein referred to contained, nor anything of them except that they were made on buff-colored wrapping-paper with torn uneven edges. When shown the sheets of Exhibit No. 20 and several others, he states that he is of the opinion that he had not seen them until the week prior to his deposition, when they were shown him by Johnson's attorney. He denies that Browning disclosed the invention in issue to him or that he had knowledge that Browning claimed to be the inventor of a cabineted talking-machine embodying it at the time the drawings referred to in the letter of November 22, 1905, were considered by the Victor Company, and states that had Browning made such a representation to him by sketches or otherwise it would have been impressed upon his mind and also taken up carefully by his organization, for the reason that they were then about ready to put the Victrola on the market. He states that he really acted in the capacity of a clerk to the board of directors of the Victor Company when patent matters were submitted for consideration; that he was acting in that capacity when he wrote the letter of November 22, 1905, and that legal matters were not handled in his department. In answer to X-Q. 49 (p. 654, Johnson's rec.) he testifies:

"I have no recollection of having any interview with Mr. Browning in reference to any patent whatsoever during my lifetime. There may have been correspondence going through the office with my signature on as secretary. But I don't recall any now except the letter referred to in my previous testimony."

He states that he looked up the minutes of the board and could find no reference to the submission of drawings by Browning, as referred to in the letter of November 22, 1905.

Haddon, who is vice-president of the Victor Talking Machine Company and was one of its directors in 1905, testifies to practically the same effect as do Bennett and Middleton. He states that he never saw the seven sheets of drawing, of which three are a part of Browning's Exhibit No. 20, until a few days before his testimony is given, (Q. 4, p. 668; X-Q. 66, p. 683, Johnson's rec.,) and states that his recollection is that the drawings referred to in the letter of November 22, 1905, "were of an indiscriminate character and were drawn or sketched on very irregular shaped pieces of wrapping paper, manila colored."

He says:

"They related so far as I recall to what were supposed to be alleged improvements on the motor product of the Victor Company generally but were unintelligible in themselves to me."

He says he was told they represented attempts at various motor improvements.[1]

Haddon denies that Browning represented to him or to other officials of the Victor Talking Machine Company, when the drawings referred to in the letter of November 22, 1905, were submitted, that he was the inventor of the subject-matter here in issue. He does not recall the names of the members of the board of directors who went over the drawings referred to in the letter of November 22, 1905, or that he was present or that any member of the board ever discussed the drawings with him.

Johnson, as before stated, did not take the stand on account of alleged illness. His physician, Faries, testifies as follows:

"Q. 7. In your last answer you referred to 'his old trouble.' Please state what you mean by that?

"A. Mr. Johnson suffered with a type of melancholia.

"Q. 8. Will you briefly state how this type of melancholia affects him mentally?

"A. Insomnia, continual fretting, impossible to concentrate his mind on any one subject or to recall clearly past happenings.

"Q. 9. As his physician, would you give your consent to having Mr. Johnson attempt to appear in this proceeding and testify in his own behalf?

"A. I would not.

"Q. 10. Will you please state in general what are your instructions and orders to Mr. Johnson as to what he shall do and as to what interest he shall take in business matters?

"A. All business to be given up entirely. Nothing of a business nature to be brought to his attention. To be kept in the open air, amused, exercise, even papers where the news has been particularly depressing kept from him and that no business matters be brought to his attention.

"Q. 11. When did you first give instruction such as you have outlined in your last answer?

"A. In the early part of November, prior to the 15th of November, such instructions were given in this last recurrence of his disease.

"Q. 12. And when you gave him those instructions did you know that these proceedings of taking testimony was pending?

[1] Browning testifies that he was working on a talking-machine motor invention at least a part of his time from August, 1901, to August, 1902. (X-Q. 258, p. 138, Browning's rec.) He testified in interference No. 40,180 that he submitted a motor invention to the attorney, Kennedy, of the Victor Company, some time in June, 1906. Kennedy is dead.

"A. I did not.

"Q. 13. And did you know at that time that you might be expected to give testimony in this proceeding?

"A. I did not.

"X-Q. 49. From September, when he returned from Atlantic City, until the first of January, 1918, how often did you actually attend Mr. Johnson?

"A. From the time of his return early in September there was no occasion to attend Mr. Johnson until I was called in to see him in the first part of November for a cold and some disturbance to his digestive tract.

"X-Q. 50. And how often from your first visit in November, 1917, have you attended Mr. Johnson?

A. During most of that period daily—every day.

"X-Q. 58. What activities, if any, has he engaged in from January up to date?

"A. Walking, automobiling, three days spent at Atlantic City, at which place he was sent by me, returning earlier than I wanted him to do; this caused really, though, by his mental condition.

"X-Q. 59. Has he played any golf during this time, if you know?

"A. No."

MacEwan, Johnson's brother-in-law, testified on redirect examination as follows:

"R. D. Q. 978. You have been asked, on your cross-examination, whether you know Mr. E. R. Johnson very well and when you saw him last previous to January 8, 1918. You may please state what was Mr. Johnson's condition, physically, when you saw him on January 6, 1918, as you have testified.

"A. Mr. Johnson was then, and is now, a very sick man.

"R. D. Q. 979. You may state, if you know, for how long Mr. Johnson has been ill.

"A. This last spell that he has has been since the latter part of September or the fore part of October, 1917. It is in the nature of a very serious nervous breakdown. He doesn't sleep and he doesn't talk and he can't read and he seems to be in a terrible condition generally. He doesn't want to see anybody at all. This spell that he has now just followed a previous spell that he had during the summer of almost the same kind.

"R. D. Q. 980. Will you please state how long it has been since Mr. Johnson has been at the office of the Victor Talking Machine Company to attend to business?

"A. I couldn't say how many times he was here in the time between the two spells in September; I don't think it was more than two or three times, and previous to that he had not been here for a long time, and since that time he hasn't been around.

"R. D. Q. 981. Will you please state whether or not he is under the doctor's care and instructions?

"A. Yes, he is under the doctor's care—constant care."

The taking of Johnson's proofs closed April 17, 1918; Browning's rebuttal proofs closed May 31, 1918. Thereafter, on September 12, 1918, Johnson made an affidavit, which was presented at final hearing before the Examiner of Interferences and which sets forth the state of his health as the reason for his not testifying and affirms that he was the original inventor of the subject-matter in this interference. This affidavit was, of course, not admitted. Browning contends that it shows that Johnson was able to testify had he not been afraid of cross-examination. I am not persuaded that this is the case, especially as it was made five months after Johnson's proofs closed, and he may have somewhat improved in health by that time; but I do regard the attempt to present evidence in this manner as meriting severe censure.

English was too ill to be called and died before the taking of testimony was completed.

I have detailed at considerable length the testimony submitted by both parties with reference to Browning's Exhibit No. 20 and its alleged use by Browning in disclosing the invention to the officials of the Victor Talking Machine Company because this claimed disclosure and the one alleged through Pettit in 1900 by means of Browning's Exhibit No. 7 comprise the only specific attacks made upon Johnson's originality up to the taking of Browning's rebuttal proofs. Even if the alleged disclosures by Browning's Exhibit No. 20 in October or November, 1905, were fully established, however, this alone would not defeat Johnson, for, as has already been found, he had previously reduced the invention to practice by means of the Sheip cabinet (Johnson's Exhibit No. 36) as early as September, 1905.

Before turning to Browning's rebuttal I shall briefly recall the remaining leading facts of his prima facie case.

The letter of November 22, 1905, requested that a sample of a composition for record material supposed to have been invented by Browning should be submitted to the Victor Company, together with information as to how to mix it, and Browning testifies that he complied with this request a month or so later; also that along about this time he had taken up the study of pattern-making, was working on his motor invention, and getting ready for testimony for the Victor Talking Machine Company in interference No. 25,003, involving the Browning application, No. 186,197, filed October 22, 1903, which he had assigned to the Victor Talking Machine Co. for about two hundred dollars. He claims to have lacked funds at this time, and hence to have sold his carrying-case machine (Browning's Exhibit No. 16) to Mrs. Bennett, as has been previously mentioned. About this time he claims to have begun to teach himself how to make Patent Office drawings, as he did not have enough money to have his application prepared. In the summer of 1906 he made patterns, core-boxes, mold-boxes (Browning's Exhibits Nos. 16, 17, and 19) in interference No. 33,738. In January, 1907, he filed an application for another invention on a tone-arm construction, and in February, 1907, he says he completed another modification of his invention. (Browning's Exhibit No. 26.)

On November 2, 1906, Browning testifies that the first sample Victrola went through the shipping department of the Victor Company. He states:

"After I received these samples in the early part of November, 1906, I then realized that the Victor Company did not intend to do anything with any of the sketches which showed this invention which I showed them about a year previous, between October and November, 1905, and if I ever would get any assistance I would have to get it outside of the Victor Talking Machine Company or any of my acquaintances, all of whom now I thought I had exhausted after my many appeals. And I determined then to secure another position as I felt that I had been misled and misinformed by the various officials of the Victor Talking Machine Company and their entire board of directors. I next commenced to inquire around to see if I could possibly get another position, and to bring my inventions to a marketable product, and promptly after the Christmas rush I started to advertise for another position. This position I did not secure until June, 1907, when I secured a position in Kansas City, Mo., with the J. W. Jenkins Music Co., where I went in July, 1907."

He states that by October 21, 1907, he had made and delivered a commercial machine, of which Browning's Exhibit No. 27—"Browning's cabinet top portion"—is an example.

There is no dispute as to the construction of this Browning Exhibit No. 27 device, and I pass the details of the proof concerning it without further comment than to remark that it is like the structure disclosed in Browning's application, which was prepared in November, 1907, and filed January 18, 1908, and also to state that on behalf of Johnson it has been urged that this exhibit device—a mere top with an inclosed horn for a phonograph—is all Browning invented. This Browning Exhibit No. 27 device is certainly a departure in type from the various models and sketches which are said to have preceded it and which show one form or another of unitary cabinet with separate chambers for reproducer and horn.

Browning prepared his own application disclosing and claiming his Exhibit No. 27 construction, and filed it January 18, 1908. On page 1 of his specification he described the device as "a combined cabinet cover to fit on or over the cabinet of various sound recording or reproducing machines now in use."

There is considerable contention as to when he first presented a claim in this application at all commensurate with the invention here in issue. Counsel for Browning has pointed out original claim 19 as being broader than the present issue. In many respects it is quite near to it; but in the introductory clause—"a cabinet adapted to be secured to" a sound recording or reproducing machine—the distinguishing form of Browning's Cabinet Exhibit No. 27 is clearly indicated.

Browning testifies that he submitted his application papers to the Victor Talking Machine Company in 1910. This, however, was subsequent to the date of Johnson's patent, and I do not find that at that time Browning was presenting claims which indicated an intention to cover the Victrola.

Browning took extensive testimony during the time assigned him for rebuttal proofs. A very large amount of this testimony was not properly rebuttal, but of a character which should have been introduced as a part of Browning's prima facie case. On behalf of Browning it has been urged that the object of his rebuttal proofs, which allege a whole series of additional disclosures to Johnson, was to show that Johnson was not an original inventor. It is said that when Browning took his prima facie proofs and charged disclosure to Johnson through Pettit in 1900 by the sketch (Browning's Exhibit No. 7) and through the board of directors of the Victor Company prior to November 22, 1905, by means of the drawings (Browning's Exhibit No. 20) he (Browning) had no reason to suppose that any effort would be made to refute these charges, and when such a fact developed it was perfectly proper for Browning to introduce further proofs showing that Johnson had derived the invention from him.

I am not greatly impressed with this contention if from it the inference is expected to be drawn that as a matter of strategy Browning held back a part of his case until he could fully survey the position to be taken by his opponent. As a matter of fairness, the whole attack upon Johnson's originality, so far as there contemplated, should have been made during Browning's prima facie case. As a matter of fact, I believe that this was done, and as evidence of it call attention to the fact that Browning and his wife assert that the sketch Browning's Exhibit No. 50, which is the central piece of record evidence about which the further alleged disclosures turn, was discovered by them in the bottom of a wardrobe during the taking of Middleton's testimony, while Browning was searching for further letters from the Victor Talking Machine Company, which he still believes he has in the house, but has never found. (X-Q. 277, p. 462, Browning's rec.)

Browning's preliminary statement included the following paragraph:

"I first disclosed the invention to others on the third day of May, 1897, and as early as October 6, 1905, I disclosed the said invention to the officers and attorneys of the Victor Talking Machine Company, giving them drawings and descriptions of the same."

It is noteworthy that in this statement there is no allegation of a disclosure directly to Johnson, and I do not find that such a charge was made during Browning's prima facie proofs. Those proofs charged disclosure to Pettit, who is dead; to Kennedy, who is dead; to Middleton, who denies it, and to Mr. Bennett, who denies it. The reader of Browning's rebuttal record is therefore somewhat unprepared to meet therein a vivid portrayal of an entirely independent set of disclosures at no less than seven separate conferences said to have occurred at an entirely different period of time running from about December 22, 1903, to prior to April 24, 1904. Browning now claims to have disclosed the subject-matter in issue to Johnson on three occasions, to Bennett on three occasions, and to Johnson, Dennison, and Middleton at least once, and in three of these instances to have shown his newly-discovered sketch, (Browning's Exhibit No. 50.) This testimony, coming, as it does, after Johnson's case had closed and after it had been shown by the testimony of the physician, Faries, that Johnson was unable to take the stand and after it had also been shown that Johnson had actually built the Medara, Stevens, and Sheip cabinets and reduced the invention to practice, as I have found, at least as early as September, 1905, and prior to Browning's charged disclosures in November, 1905, by means of the drawings of his Exhibit No. 20, leads the reader to wonder whether Browning had forgotten all about these early 1904 happenings when he made his preliminary statement and took his prima facie proofs or whether he came forward with this additional story in a desperate attempt to win a case of great value, which he stood a chance to lose. The Examiners-in-Chief took the latter view, and I have found nothing in Browning's proofs to satisfy me that they were in error. Certainly, if these numerous disclosures occurred, Browning would not have forgotten them. Yet he himself does not explain why he did not testify of them in his prima facie case or refer to them in his preliminary statement. The argument has been made that the rules do not require that allegations of lack of originality shall be made in preliminary statements, and hence no inference unfavorable to Browning should be drawn from his failure to allege his earliest date of disclosure to Johnson. I am not greatly impressed with this argument, especially as Browning undertook in his preliminary statement to make allegations on this subject.

Browning's charges of disclosure made in his rebuttal proofs not being proper rebuttal, I do not see that it was incumbent upon Johnson to undertake the presentation of surrebuttal to refute them, and especially as Bennett, Middleton, and Haddon had denied generally disclosures at any time of this issue to them by Browning. If it was desired to attack their credibility, Browning's rebuttal should have been limited to facts referred to in the testimony-in-chief.

Another feature of Browning's rebuttal testimony is an attempt to establish that he had claimed to be the inventor of the Victrola structure after it came upon the market. He does not claim to have protested to the Victrola officials, but continued in the employ of the Victor Company for fully eight months after the first Victrola went through his hands to the market. This he seeks to explain on the score that he was poor and had a number of relatives working for the Victor Company. The facts that he did not ever protest to the Victor officials; that he did not then promptly file an application; that the first and only commercial machine, (Browning's Exhibit No. 27,) which he constructed later, even though it embodies the issue, was quite different in design from the Victrola and the previous structures Browning claims to have produced, are more persuasive to me than the testimony of Browning and Stafford in regard to Browning's having called Stafford's attention to the Victor product by the letter of February 26, 1907, (Browning's Exhibit No. 51,) or Shuster's testimony that in the spring of 1907 Browning had represented to him that he (Browning) was the inventor of the Victrola and that the Victor Company had appropriated it.

Browning called in rebuttal one William W. Morton, a machinist, in an attempt to obtain corroboration of Browning's contention of disclosure to him of the drawings of Exhibit No. 20. Morton should have been called during the prima facie case, if at all, for this purpose. His testimony is not convincing, especially his attempts at identification of the drawings. He fixes the date of his interview with Browning as late in the fall of 1905, whereas it was developed that in an earlier interference (No. 33,738) Browning had testified that it occurred in 1903.

But perhaps the most significant circumstance in this case is the manner in which Browning prosecuted his application, which, as has been said, he prepared and filed himself.

On May 2, 1911, claims in Browning's application were rejected on Johnson's patent in connection with other references. On August 29, 1911, the count of what was to become interference No. 33,738 (Johnson and English v. Browning) was suggested to Browning. This interference was decided in favor of Browning on April 4, 1913, following a concession of priority.

On March 21, 1913, a new specification and claims were presented in the Browning application. Johnson's patent claim corresponding to the count was not included; but all the claims presented carried limitations either to a sound-conduit extending outside the cabinet or to an amplifier with adjustable side walls or to means for adjusting the area of the space surrounding the amplifier.

On May 2, 1914, claims 4 and 5 were rejected on a patent to Klenk and the Johnson patent in contest.

On April 15, 1915, new claims 12 to 30 were presented, none of which included as elements the doors of this issue. This amendment was accompanied by an affidavit by Browning averring that he had made the invention defined by the claims of the last two amendments and reduced to practice prior to July 19, 1906.

On April 28, 1915, an argument was filed stating that "it is not understood that the Johnson patent has any bearing upon the claims in question" and urging that the affidavit filed overcame the other references. Special features of several claims were pointed out as distinguishing from Johnson. The affidavit was said to have been intended to provoke interferences with Echard's Patent, No. 974,227, and the English Patent No. 1,022,582.

On April 30, 1915, Browning filed another affidavit, accompanied by two drawings, (marked A and B.) He therein averred that he made the invention disclosed in the first of these, A, prior to January 12, 1906, the filing date of the application on which Johnson's patent issued, but the structure of this drawing, A, resembling Browning's Exhibit No. 15, did not disclose the issue, as there was but one door in front of the amplifier. As to the structure of the other drawing, B, which seems to answer the issue, Browning merely swore that he completed that before February 15, 1907. While there is nothing conclusive about these averments, they are deemed significant in view of the marketing of the Victrola in November, 1906, with Browning's knowledge, and in view of the fact that the Johnson patent had long been in the record to his knowledge also. Still the Johnson claim was not presented by Browning, and he did not present it until after it had been suggested for interference by the Patent Office on June 3, 1915. The claim was made on June 18, 1915, and the interference was declared on September 28, 1915.

After the interference was declared it was dissolved by the Law Examiner in view of the facts appearing above, in accordance with the doctrine of Rowntree v. Sloan, (227 O. G., 744; 45 App. D. C., 207.) This decision was affirmed on appeal to the Examiners-in-Chief, who said of Browning:

"* * * It is clear that he never took any steps toward the bringing about of an interference with the patent until, as above stated, he accepted the suggestion of the Office and made his interfering claim."

Thereupon Browning appealed to the Commissioner and filed affidavits by himself and his wife, setting out that he had written a letter on September 6, 1911, here introduced in evidence as Browning's Exhibit No. 33, and reading as follows:

"546 HADDON AVE.,
"Camden, N. J., Sept. 6, 1911.

"Messrs. Hunter & Hunter,
"724 Mutual Life Bldg.,
"Phila., Penn.

"Mr. E. H. Hunter.

"DEAR SIR: In the matter of my application Serial Number 411,454, I have examined my records as you suggested, as to the earliest forms of my operative devices and find I have positive proof of reduction to practice prior to the filing date of Miller, Schroder, Johnson, Douglas, Halle and Klenk's French patent and other patents cited. In reference to Miller patent filed Dec. 6, 1904, and the Johnson patent, #946,442, filed Jan. 12, 1906, I find I am entitled to an interference with either of these patents and I want you to take the necessary steps to have an interference declared as soon as possible, especially the Johnson patent, as I have continuously claimed the same general subject matter. Just as soon as you have the necessary affidavits prepared I will stop over and execute them as I want to get the patent as soon as possible.

"Yours very truly,
"(Signed) JOHN B. BROWNING."

Also there was filed an affidavit by one J. Stuart Freeman to the effect that in November, 1913, he was employed by Browning's former attorney, Hunter, who was then ill, and that he had several interviews with Browning about his different applications, including the application No. 411,454 in this interference, and that at that time he saw the original letter of September 6, 1911, a copy of which was attached as Exhibit A.

In view of the foregoing affidavits the decision of the Examiners-in-Chief that the interference should be dissolved was reversed to give Browning an opportunity to explain, by regularly-taken proofs, his delay in bringing about the interference with Johnson. Browning, his wife, and Freeman have testified in this interference consistently with their aforesaid affidavits and have identified Browning's Exhibit No. 33 as the original letter.

Counsel for Johnson has pointed out how well calculated is the language of this exhibit to meet the doctrine of Rowntree v. Sloan, supra, and how opportunely this letter was discovered and presented shortly after the adverse decisions on the motion to dissolve. The Examiners-in-Chief thought this letter was probably a changeling for another letter Freeman had seen in the file. I hesitate to reach that conclusion, especially in view of Freeman's very positive testimony that he saw this exhibit late in 1913, as he states; but I view it with suspicion, and I do not think the fact of its existence then, if admitted, excuses Browning for not earlier provoking this interference. At the date this letter was written—September 6, 1911—Browning was still prosecuting his own application. The Johnson patent had been cited against claims in his application the preceding May. By a letter mailed directly to him on August 29, 1911, the claim which became the count of the Johnson and English v. Browning interference was suggested to Browning, and on September 6, 1911, the very date of the letter Browning's Exhibit No. 33, Browning himself filed an amendment, under date of September 5, 1911, presenting that claim in his case. Why, if he knew of his right to an interference on September 6, 1911, as his letter states, did he not then also file an amendment presenting Johnson's patent claim? As a matter of fact, Hunter was not given a power of attorney until October 28, 1911, and Browning's attempts to explain his delay in provoking the interference on the score of neglect by Hunter and the latter's illness cannot very well apply to a period prior to the time Hunter was given a power of attorney, even though Browning had previously consulted Hunter as early as June, 1911, as he testifies. It is apparent from Browning's answers to X-Qs. 375, 376 (p. 167, Browning's rec.) that he believed Hunter was his attorney when the letter of September 6, 1911, (Browning's Exhibit No. 33,) purports to have been written, and that letter is worded as though such were the case. Browning retained full control of his application until he assigned it on August 15, 1912, to the Keen-O-Phone Company, which reassigned it to him on August 6, 1914, (Browning's Exhibit No. 39,) and then, despite another rejection on Johnson's patent in May, 1914, nothing was done until April 28, 1915, when an amendment was filed seeking to distinguish from Johnson's patent. Browning seeks to ascribe this to Hunter's ill health; but Browning was not wholly unaware of what Hunter was doing, for he executed an affidavit in this very case at about that time seeking to overcome references, as previously explained.

I think that there is good ground for holding Browning estopped by his laches from obtaining a patent.

I am not satisfied that Browning's proofs measure up to the burden of proof that rests upon him. Johnson had established the earlier reduction to practice, at a time when Browning was not diligent. I do not think Browning's proofs establish such a case of poverty as to excuse his lack of diligence, especially as he was working on various other inventions and filed other applications after his alleged conception, but before his present application was filed. He was able, when he got ready, to prepare and file this application himself. Viewed as a straight priority case, Browning cannot prevail. Viewed as an originality case, he has not established his position with sufficient certainty to lead me to reverse the decision below.

The very lapse of time that has transpired since the events referred to are alleged to have occurred tends to make Browning's task more difficult. That he should have knowingly permitted his opponent to build up an immense business over a period of years; that he should have failed to have promptly insisted upon and persisted until he secured an interference with the Johnson patent after he learned of it; that the delay has been so great that many of the persons best able to testify as to the facts on both sides are incapacitated or dead, and, finally, that Browning should have undertaken, in rebuttal, virtually to build up a new case of originality combine to convince me that he should not receive the award of priority.

It is a case where actions speak louder than words.

The decision of the Examiners-in-Chief awarding priority to the senior party, Eldridge R. Johnson, is affirmed.
